Alumni Community Surpasses Goal for Light the World

Boston College Law School recently closed out its most ambitious fundraising effort ever—part of the University-wide Light the World campaign—with gifts and pledges totaling nearly $64 million, more than 25 percent beyond its original goal.

“This was a remarkable achievement, particularly given the economic conditions in place when the campaign held its public launch in 2008,” says Jessica Cashdan, executive director of advancement and associate dean. “Our success is due entirely to the hard work and commitment of alumni, students, faculty, parents, and friends who embraced the campaign’s potential to secure a bright future for BC Law.”

Among the largest areas to benefit are life-changing financial aid, vital support for faculty scholarship, and major investments in new centers of excellence. The campaign also helped fund numerous public service initiatives and curricular innovations that strengthen BC Law’s position as one of the premier law schools in the nation.

Above all, the campaign has helped maintain BC Law’s impressive track record in preparing students to play meaningful roles throughout society. From law firms to boardrooms, from government agencies to legislatures, from nonprofit organizations to entrepreneurial ventures, our graduates make a difference in every aspect of social, legal, and political life in this country.

“The Light the World campaign has strengthened our ability to deliver on our commitment to prepare today’s students to become tomorrow’s leaders,” notes Dean Vincent Rougeau. “We extend deep gratitude to each and every person who played a role in this success.”
